Transmission Line

Contracts for long lead equipment executed (420MVA Transformer, poles, etc.) and the poles ordered.

AusNet Services is undertaking final micro-siting of pole locations for the transmission line based on vegetation and cultural heritage assessments.

Victorian-based Wilson Transformer Company has been awarded the contract to supply two 120 MVA (132/33kV) transformers for the Ryan Corner Collector Substation, contributing to the local content of the project.

The main 420 MVA (500/132kV) transformer that will convert power from the wind farms for use on the grid has been already ordered.

Did you know?

What is the current electricity generation mix in Australia?

The Australian Energy Market Operator (AEMO) website has information in real time on the sources of energy and how they are distributed to each state and nationally. You can view the KWs and the percentages of contribution for black coal, brown coal, hydro, gas, solar, battery, liquid fuel, biomass and wind. The statistics can be viewed as current, 24 hours, 48 hours, 3 months and 24 months.

As you can see in the graphs above wind energy is contributing a considerable percentage to our energy mix.

For more information go to their web site at AEMO | NEM data dashboard and click on the Fuel Mix tab.
