Ryan Corner – Who's who?

Camino Cabanillas – Project manager

Camino Cabanillas is a Spanish civil engineer who has managed the construction of a range of renewable energy and power generation projects, including wind, solar and hydroelectric facilities in over 10 countries. One of these was the Amayo Wind Farm in Nicaragua, the first wind energy project to be built in the country and the largest in Latin America at that time. Camino is proud to work on renewable energy projects that will benefit both business and local communities and help achieve Australia's renewable energy targets.

Camino enjoys her regular visits to Port Fairy and the southwest of Victoria. Port Fairy's beaches and the local restaurants and country pubs keep her eagerly returning for work and relaxation with her family.

'When my company offered me the possibility to come Down Under to work, I had no doubt to accept, since both professionally and personally the proposal was very attractive. Australia is a great place to be and I am proud to bring a small contribution to its renewable industry.'
